With only a few months until the presidential election, it's critical to understand what makes a good leader. When electing government officials, we should not just focus on their platforms and agendas but also on their character and values. Dependability, integrity, and perseverance are attributes that a successful leader possesses. It should be impossible how somebody can lead and direct a group, or in this case, an entire nation, without these abilities.

One of the most crucial things a leader should be being dependable. Leaders deal with so much responsibility and it is important to act on every one of those. Making difficult decisions is a part of being a leader, and it is your responsibility to do so. One has the qualities of a great leader if people can rely on you not just on good times but also through worse.

Integrity is another crucial trait of a great leader. If you have strong values, you will make the most responsible decisions and do what you honestly believe is best. The ability to be truthful, reliable, consistent, faithful, and moral is referred to as integrity. To be a good leader, you must possess these qualities in order to lead with integrity and justice.

Analytical abilities are required. Leadership encompasses not just personal qualities but also organizational skills. A strong leader can see the big picture while also dividing things down into smaller chunks. Along with analytical skills, communication skills also contribute of what makes a leader.

Leadership is a quality that not everyone possesses. There are only a few people among us who have the attributes of leadership and hence have the potential to lead.

Every leader does not have to be a good leader. Leaders who can make things happen are good leaders. Good leaders believe in following through on their promises. They labor on it till their mission is completed successfully. This attribute of good leaders motivates others to follow in their footsteps.
