

MILLENNIALISM

by:

Sharon C. Diesta

Teacher II, Alangan Elementary School

“Generation Z” is considered as the younger generation of the country. From puberty age to adolescence period. They are also known as the millennials. Millennials are the future generation of leaders from the 21st century who will run the nation.

Millennials are known as pro-active. With enthusiasm to explore and innovate ideas, they wanted to present ideas in their most creative way. For instance, a simple roleplaying activity will be applied with Information and Communication Technology (ICT), computer generated presentation is applied. The integration of ICT turns a roleplay into short video dramatization.

They are inclined with modern technologies such as cellphones, laptop, computer tablets, xbox and even other online game application. They are able to determine what will be the result of their action. Yet, most of the millennials are very aggressive to things they want to discover. That leads to confusion and even larger problems.

They also known as multi-tasking. They can do things in one sitting. Hence, they forgot the quality of their output. Because of so many interesting tasks to be accomplished, this individual neglected the value of the product. Lacking of focus can be heeded. Inconsistency can be reflected if repeated. Retention to mastery is also observed.

‘Millennialism’ is an noun that pertains to a system where an individual is on the process to do to do all these. Personal observation of millennial representation includes behaviour. The behaviour of the younger generation shows advancement to technology hence it is alarming that most of the millennials engaging to 'millennialism' are lacking the capacity to take serious responsibility. They are easily stressed out to sudden pressure or apprehension. They become very conscious to what other may react. Sometimes, they tend to become depressed when they did not meet the standard or expectation of the society. Even though they have the drive to push though, when things get tough, they drive becomes inactive.

This is one of the many reasons why most of younger generation involve themselves to online games. They hid most of their fears and sadness to fantasy. The fantasy world where they can become superior. It is where they can have super powers and become famous without revealing their true self. And as they grow older, they keep on living this way. They almost forget to realize that the real world is more beautiful and exciting than in the fantasy world.

And now, even the elders are trying to reach the level of the millennials. Learning from the point of view of the younger generation can meet both worlds yet there must be realization to its limits. Elders should continue to instill among millennials the value of good manners and right conduct. To keep the golden rules in their hearts and minds. Reality must be ensured to make the future be treated in a most factual human culture. And to understand that, millennials is just part of development not of human structure and behaviour.

References:

Landes, Richard, "Millennialism"

Retrieved from <https://www.britannica.com>