

EDUCATION AS A CULTIVATOR OF CULTURE

by:

Lauro Y. Dela Rosa Jr.

Teacher II, Bataan School of Fisheries

Education can help to cultivate culture. Education brings about the desired changes in culture and way of life necessary for society's progression. In that way, the survival of civilization, transfer of culture, growth of culture, enabling humanity to respond to new cultural characteristics, shaping the character, rebuilding humanity's oneness with culture dissemination, and eradicating cultural gap are factors that influence culture.

It can be manifested that culture lays the path for education, and education is in charge of infusing cultural values into people's lives. As a result, culture and education must be intertwined in diverse situations.

The Philippine society is a significant indication of diversity and uniformity. The Philippines' society and culture are a combination of different Filipino and Spanish Catholic customs and contributions from America and other regions of Asia. Typically, Filipinos are family-oriented and generally deeply religious societies who enjoy creativity, fashion, theater, and cuisine. Moreover, Filipinos are likewise friendly individuals who want the occasional moment. This frequently entails a get-together to talk, mingle, and enjoy. The Filipino calendar, each year schedule is jam-packed with events, including many that merge pre-Christian customs and ceremonies with contemporary Christian beliefs and philosophy. Notwithstanding a succession of mainly unfavorable rulers, the Philippines' volatile past has produced a kind, resilient, entire extended family ties, passionately Christian, and talented society.

References:

The significance of culture-based education in Philippines: Cultural. The Knowledge Review. (2018, December 26). Retrieved June 3, 2022, from <https://theknowledgereview.com/significance-culture-based-education-philippines/>