Recently, pandemic plague conveys diverse challenges to our living including our educational system – a pervasive closure of schools where the mode of learning and teaching rehabilitated from traditional to distance learning in which educational and instructional technology are one of the necessities for the preparation of steering a new modality of learning amidst pandemic.

Thus, to continue the teaching and learning process, Department of Education (DepEd) made their pronouncement to find various ways on how students continue their learning wherein several modalities are applied such as online (synchronous and asynchronous), blended, (combination of online and face-to-face learning) and modular learning since face-to-face classes is not allowed and since not all students are privileged enough to own any technological devices at home like Laptop, computer, and smartphone. But the question is, are these materials available?

Consequently, one of the ways to support teachers and students teaching-learning process amidst pandemic is the utilization of the DepEd-Learning Management System. A Learning Management System (LMS) is a software and a web-based that countenance teachers and students to have access to the learning resources/materials such as ready to view digitized and the ready-to-print learning materials like self-learning modules (SLMs) and supplementary learning materials for all grade level, from the DepEd LR portal and DepEd common.

According to Secretary Leonor Briones, evaluating and analyzing the learning resources are important to have a quality education and to determine the inadequacy, errors, absence and other issues including technological challenges wherein educational technology and the use of learning materials is much more accessible and extensively used by the teachers and learners in the teaching-learning process. Therefore, quality learning materials will be the driving force behind a good foundation of learning and to provide quality education which is the main objective of the department.
