

PARENTS SUPPORT FACTOR FOR SUCCESS OF MODULAR DISTANCE LEARNING

Modern students were primarily focused on the self-learning module, which is a flexible method of education that allowed them to pick what to learn, when to learn, where to learn, and how to learn. Parents play a significant role in the learning process because they encourage their children to learn independently while ensuring that they do so in an effective manner.

How can parents contribute to the success of modular education? Every parent has a unique method of instruction, and most of them give their child their entire support, devoting more time and effort to ensure that their children have a deep understanding of the lesson. Particularly if their child is in a lower grade, they must be more patient and consider what measures can be utilized to grab their child's attention. Being creative or artistic is a strategic teaching method, such as employing an object that symbolizes what the students must learn. While other parents like to motivate their children by providing them with new devices that can be used for schoolwork, these parents provide their children with new study-related devices.

Parents, teachers, and other family and community members help children learn best when they work together. This truth should guide school organizations and student education. Schools can't meet all a child's developmental needs without parental and community involvement. Today, building strong family-school ties might be difficult. Families must be equal participants in schooling. Families must help kids at home and school. Today's society increasingly demands lifelong learning.

Our parents are our first teachers because they develop our social skills by studying our personality, strengths, and shortcomings to lead us and because they know how to punish and manage our conduct as a means of demonstrating their love and support for us. The greatest beneficiaries of all are our children. When we come into a school and witness parents and teachers working together in a variety of positions, it is a sure sign that the school encourages pupils to reach their full potential regardless of color, class, or culture.
