

SOCIAL MEDIA AMONG STUDENTS AND TEACHERS

by:
Francis M. Oligo

With the rise of technology, many people which includes educational institutions adapt with changes and make use of it. One of this is social media. Interactivity, connection, and user-generated content define social media. The use of social media has evolved into a daily need. Social media is typically used for social interaction and access to news and information, and decision making. Today, social media is also used by the majority including teachers and students.

The use of social media allows life of student to improve. Social media in education allows students, teachers, and parents to access more helpful information, connect with learning groups, and utilize other educational systems that make learning more efficient. Social media also help improve learning methods and techniques.

Social media platforms open doors for more opportunity to learn. They can engage with the platforms and interact with it. Students can also benefit from online tutorials on YouTube, online courses from colleges and experts who are content creators across the world given via different social media platforms, and a variety of resources shared through social media.

Since social media is known for its interactivity and connectedness, it can be a good mode of communication. Students, teachers, and even parents can easily connect and communicate. They can easily keep in touch online especially now in this time of the pandemic where face to face interaction is limited.

It is also a vast pool of information in which students can benefit from. Students can find research and upload their works to also help other students. They can also make contents for research. When working with assignments and school projects, students can also find and extract useful information to make their works good.

Teachers also use social media to find new materials to enhance their classes, such as activities to teach specific concepts, bulletin board ideas, make interesting PowerPoint, information on new apps to follow up on specific topics and subjects, and to connect and stay informed about what is going on in schools across the world.

Everyone can benefit from using social media as a tool. It is now a big part of daily lives of people. Teachers and students should make use of technology to enhance the quality of education and communication between teachers and parents. Social media is a good opportunity to change and improve how teachers teach and students learn.

References:

Teachers And Social Media: The Online Pros And Cons In <https://www.uopeople.edu/blog/teachers-and-social-media/>