Stakeholders are the actors, and actresses who have a significant impact in the upbringing of the future generations. They are our beloved and diligent school administrators, dedicated teachers, supportive parents, and helpful private sectors. "It takes a village to raise a child," a well-known phrase, recalls the meaning of a society that assists one another in nurturing tomorrow's children. Each stakeholder has an important role to play in the education system. They are the ones who mold humanity. They are the ones who mold the world. We have a lot to offer the Filipino young. Let us use the abilities that have been entrusted to us, not by men but by our Almighty God, to alter society into one that belongs the generations of courage, strength, integrity, honesty, bravery, and God-loving people. The school head, who is the school's pillar of strength and ethics, is always thinking of ways to improve the service. The dedicated teachers to spend sleepless nights passing on the mantle of molding students in to responsible citizen, working in collaboration with parents and guardians. Parents who work tirelessly day and night to make ends meet and send their children to school. The helpful private sectors and groups that unfailingly support the advocacy of the Department of Education's agency. Not to mention the learners; they are the reason that all other stakeholders collaborate to raise the to be the best, competitive, God-fearing, nationalistic, honest and respect-loving humans possible. We, educators, public and private institutions, and the local government unit that comprise the community, are the stakeholders who are active in the school's activities, programs, and initiatives for the benefit of the students.

Because of the challenges we all face, the times have corrupted humanity through deception, abuse, exploit, manipulation, and dishonor, when they should draw us together to protect what is good in God's and men's eyes. Despite all this chaos and confusion, there is still and will always be hope as long as we live. Our faith is in the Lord, who is a constant and faithful God. He is committed to finishing He has begun. Our students continue to battle for their right to an education. Our professors continue to think that the youth represent the future's hope, even as they heroically adapt to the new environment, or "new normal", as they call it. Our leaders are rallying to bring us all together for a better world. Our bleak circumstances have dramatically transformed us into a stronger and better community. Despite several obstacles, we as stakeholders remain steadfast in the face of any catastrophe. Truly, our world is full of promise with each new day bringing new opportunities to do better and remedy mistakes. Despite the fact that our time is risky owing to the COVID-19 virus and the consequences it has had on practically every face of life, we emerged strong as gold tested under fire. Many people have taken advantages of these possibilities to help, share what they have, and do something for others. Many people have made sacrifices to better our lives. If they can do it, so can we. Let us be the stakeholders who put others' interests and needs ahead of our own and thank God for allowing to accomplish and give something with what little you have.
