

TEACHERS GROWTH AMIDST COVID-19 CHALLENGES

by:

Joanne Kate C. Gonzales

Teacher I, Bagac National High School

Teachers are similar to parents and guardians who make sure that their children, the students, are in a good shape for learning. They provide learning materials for the students and guide them all the way to achieve success through education. With the given situation in this pandemic, teachers also experience struggles in the new normal kind of teaching which are helpful for them to determine what needs improvement.

It is difficult for the teachers to control the behavior of the students within the scope of the virtual classroom which is one of the challenges they face in this pandemic (Davis, 2021). Students are hard to be reached out because of the gaps there are. It is also a conflicting method for teachers to have different preparations than it was before the pandemic. Most importantly, the evaluation of learning is difficult to assess since there are no face-to-face meetings. These challenges are continuously faced by the teachers because of the adjustments in the system but they also continue to strive for problem resolutions.

As teachers encounter conflicts with the new methods of teaching, the challenges they are facing are their teachers for the meantime. They are important to widen the peripherals of the educational system. It is for a reason that whenever these challenges are faced and resolved with the best capability of a person, these will serve as lessons to guide future events in relation to teaching and learning. The challenges caused by the pandemic created a venue to improve the teaching practice.

References:

Davis, B. (2021, May 31). What are the challenges of teachers in new normal?
Mvorganizing.org. <https://www.mvorganizing.org/what-are-the-challenges-of-teachers-in-new-normal/>