

THE BATTLEFIELDS

by:

Sandra O. Arizobal

Teacher II, Limay National High School

Wearing the full armor of education, teachers possess more than the strength of a warrior. Warriors only fight for freedom, but teachers instill the true meaning of it and develop the essence of having it to minds and hearts of the learners while fighting the battle of diversity in a four-corner battlefield.

It takes great courage to become a noble educator, and it takes extraordinary passion to continue such profession. Your main armor is your character. Everything must start within you, for your first battlefield is yourself. Remember: You can never help a student to win a battle if you haven't won your own.

You are a soldier on a chair and your next battlefield is your desk. You might be bombarded by some tasks to accomplish with deadline to meet, but your strategy will help you to survive. Let time management be your helmet against the weight of pressure and stress. Bear in mind that time is more precious than gold. So instead of using your time complaining, grab it as your time to do a bang-up job.

Now, let's have the real combat. Do you have an intestinal fortitude to face every student in every class every day? Nothing you can overcome without the step of facing it. Your presence in the battleground which is the classroom inhabits the place for winning the minds of your students. You must win their attention so they can take everything from you by heart. Winning your students is your main goal that you may fight together, learn together. This might be the most challenging part of the combat owing to learners' diversity and different needs, but we could use the sword of wisdom so we can make right decisions and judgements and the breastplate of love to understand and meet our students' needs.

Teaching is a profession of possibilities and a story of triumphs! We are to train brave warriors of the future who can surpass all odds. We aim to educate a generation better than us. We are to follow orders affiliated to our calling. We purpose to live and win the battlefields. Believe. We educators are the victors!

References:

Felder R. M., & Brent R. (2005). Understanding student differences. Journal of Engineering Education, 94(1), 57-72.

Levy, L.S. (2015). Battlefield classroom: a new way to help teachers deal with disruptive students. Rutgers Today. Retrieved from <https://new.rutgers.edu/feature/battlefield-classroom-new-way-help-teachers-deal-disruptive-students/20151019#.W3S5VIERU0M>