The pandemic indeed brought changes and effects in our lives most especially in the way we live and in the process of doing things. It is the same in the sector of education that several changes were adopted in order to fit to the given situation.

The Department of Education (DepEd) became successful through the Basic Education – Learning Continuity Plan (BE-LCP) that served as the strong bridge to continue the education of the learners amidst the pandemic. Through BE-LCP, the Department of Education (DepEd) was able to realize the services which are essential to be rendered to the education clientele.

DepEd had its great leap through the introduction of the different learning modalities and strategies which were found feasible, useful, fruitful and meaningful. Coupled with the said methods are the Most Essential Learning Competencies (MELC's) which include all the necessary skills that the students owe to learn in various learning areas.

After the implementation of the said new trends, the educators were able to survive with flying colors and were successful in their mission to share and impart knowledge and skills in the name of quality education for the best advantage and benefit of the learners in the entire country.

Kudos to modular instruction, online learning, blended learning, radio-based instruction and television learning for they became the great means in educating the learners despite of the prevalent hazards of the pandemic. The education sector became more steadfast and resilient in trying times.

In the unfolding post pandemic period, our beloved education sector started to resume face-to-face classes in limited manner which is a big milestone after the things that happened in the world. Having the realization of limited face-to-face interactions in schools is considered as a great accomplishment and commands a great leap in the field of education.

Steadily and smoothly, the normal operations and practices are being implemented for more efficient and more effective results. It is indeed remarkable that the Department of Education (DepEd) is one of the best agencies in the land for being very responsive to the needs of people and is well-managed in terms of operations during these challenging times.

The Department of Education (DepEd) continuously shines brighter and remains steadfast with its mission, vision, goals, objectives and core values.
