

THE INFLUENCE OF TEACHERS TO THE PERSONALITY DEVELOPMENT OF STUDENTS

by:
Francis M. Oligo

The teacher is the most crucial component in any form of education. They are the one who is responsible for the process of educational implementation at any level. Teachers who are well-qualified bring about the educational development of students. A teacher that possesses a good personality can captivate students with their knowledge.

During younger years, students tend to find their role model. Someone they idolize and follow. They also look for guidance and affirmation of others. One of the roles of teachers is to aid in the development of his or her students' personalities. Students look up to their teachers and believe in what they say. The expectations and mindset that teachers project to their students has an impact to the confidence and self-esteem of students.

Every student is unique. Each one has a distinct set of skills, abilities and personality. Each students has their own needs and teachers must recognize the differences of the students. Students who are guided by a teacher who recognizes individuality of students will help them be more comfortable and confident with their own abilities.

Teachers influence how the students learn and how different aspects of their personality to develop. Engaging in different extracurricular activities allows students to interact and integrate development. Students will also most likely have their own profession and vocation. With the different physical and mental traits of students, teachers should be able to guide them on what to choose in the future.

Educational guidance is also one of the big impacts of teachers to their students. Teachers must encourage students to study and guide them in their educational career. Teachers also help students in which subjects and field are appropriate for them.

Teachers who keep in mind the interests and needs of their students, make activities related to curriculum. They also allow students to decide on their own. This helps students develop decision-making skills, unity, independence and leadership skills of the students. The activities that are performed and developed by the teachers also teaches students to become more adaptive to the changes around them.

A good personality development also comes in a good habit. That's why teachers should help students develop a good and healthy habit. If teachers let students exercise a good habit, there will be more room for improvement and development with the students. It is also important that teachers take note of the differences in the personalities and needs of the students so that they can use different approaches and methods with different students to aid their own personality development.

In conclusion, students need to develop their physical, mental, social, intellectual, and emotional state. The teachers' role is to assist students in the development of their personalities and abilities. Teachers and schools must work and give effort on the personality development of the students. In this way, teachers will shape the students to become better and help them shape their good future successes.

References:

The Importance of Teachers in Student Personality Development In <https://degree.astate.edu/articles/k-12-education/student-personality-development.aspx#:~:text=An%20educator's%20role%20is%20to,their%20self%20Destee m%20and%20confidence.>