Maintaining student engagement amid the COVID-19 crisis is one of the main issues for online learning.

Lack of interpersonal interactions, communication issues with digital gadgets, and the requirement for self-organization can all make it more difficult for learners to take in new material and monitor their learning.

The importance of the teachers' role in maintaining student engagement and motivation increases.

At the webinar hosted by the European Training Foundation on September 24, 2020, some potential solutions to issues with ensuring and improving learner participation, interaction, and cooperation for face-to-face and remote learning were discussed.

The speakers from the European Union and its surrounding countries will provide their useful advice for instructors on how to encourage engagement and activity among students while also enhancing their motivation.
