

SPED TEACHERS ARE SPECIAL

by:

Hazel P. Balansag

Teacher I, Mariveles National High School - Cabcaben

Special education teachers can make a significant difference in someone's life. Each child has a special place in a teacher's heart. Educators who are driven to provide a foundation have limitless potential in broadening young minds.

Special education teachers, in a similar vein, see themselves as architects of a child's dream. They foster an emotional learning environment where students are more motivated to develop their talents. Undoubtedly, this function cannot be taken away from the teacher and will always remain, and no machine, no matter how fancy, can perform this task.

Teachers who lack these traits are more prone to self-doubt, pessimism, exhaustion, and dissatisfaction, all of which impair their perspective.

SPED teachers, on the other hand, have exceptional techniques that have helped their students improve. They made them feel special and unique as if their disabilities could be a source of strength rather than weakness.

They taught me that we should accept every student for who they are, which inspired me to become one of the receiving teachers. Although the process of teaching and learning is protracted and convoluted, educators should be patient with students who have specific needs. Building healthy connections shouldn't be rushed; instead, it should be done gradually and spontaneously. Listen attentively. Every pupil has an issue to address every day. Do not offer a solution unless they specifically request it.

Additionally, students with disabilities yearn for affection. They would like to think that they are the only ones in the class or even in our hearts. They need us by their side, therefore always keep love as an open door. They can appreciate a modest gesture, a sincere basic gift, a simple token, or even a hug.

Last but not least, let us think of ourselves as designers of every child's wildest aspirations. We need to have faith in our ability to change the lives of our students. To achieve your objectives, make each of them your target. Keep in mind that a child with disabilities will motivate you to be a unique kind of person.

References:

Grafwallner, Peg. "What I've Learned From Special Ed Teachers." George Lucas Educational Foundation- Edutopia, December 19, 2017.

<https://www.edutopia.org/article/what-ive-learned-special-ed-teachers>

Gagnon, Danielle. "10 Qualities of a Good Teacher." Southern New Hampshire University, February 8, 2019. <https://www.snhu.edu/education>