

TEACHER'S VERSATILITY

by:

Hazel S. Linalcoso

Teacher I, Mariveles National High School - Cabcaban

As the conclusion of the school year draws near, it has been a huge comfort to see some of my pupils personally. The Department of Education has successfully navigated another year among the COVID-19 pandemic. It sticks to its mission of persevering in the face of struggle. Teachers have once again substantiated how adaptable we are at handling our duties and responsibilities. It is not petty to oversee numerous sorts of learning modalities in a single class.

One of the most imperative features of a contemporary educator today is versatility. A versatile teacher is one who has the prowess to retort to innumerable circumstances and also use cutting-edge approaches to overcome obstacles. Being versatile demands someone to be adaptable and dynamic, qualifying to relate to each learner on the foundation of their inimitable characteristics.

By exploiting a range of techniques and resources that are apposite for all pupils, teachers validate their wits and adaptability. A teacher requires to have a broad mind in order to be adaptable. This broad-mindedness can only be realized if the educator truthfully cares for their charges. When teaching, the teacher ought to exploit a learner-centered approach where the necessities of the pupils are kept at the forefront of the whole teaching process in learner-centered teaching. More indispensable than what the teacher has with the pupils is what they need.

Besides, as teaching is an honorable vocation that outlines lives rather than being just a job, a teacher ought to fix themselves before the learner she is instructing. Additionally, a wide-ranging teacher can inject new life into the class's dullness by unfolding a story or anecdote and by construing the students' moods. This way, it supports the pupils to overcome flatness and become more alert and affianced in a world where novelty is the norm.

Indeed, one competency of educators in this novel era is the facility to adapt or be adapted to countless unlike functions or activities and be changeable with grace and ease. The world is swiftly changing so as the aptitude of a teacher.

References:

Jordhus-Lier, A. (2021). Negotiating versatility and specialisation: On music teachers' identification with subject positions in Norwegian municipal schools of music and performing arts. International Journal of Music Education, 39(4), 450–463.

Jordhus-Lier, A. (2018). Institutionalising versatility, accommodating specialists: A discourse analysis of music teachers' professional identities within the Norwegian municipal school of music and arts. (Doctoral thesis). Oslo, Norwegian Academy of Music.