

COPING UP IN THE NEW NORMAL EDUCATION

by:
Teresa A. Layug
Teacher I

With the current situations that the country has been going through, the education sector has proposed and amended a new learning process to adapt to the pandemic situation. Implementing new normal to which online and modular learning belong has been integrated to avoid further implications of the Covid 19 pandemic. The government and the Department of Education have joined hands in promoting new learning modalities and integration. To pursue and continue giving education, the government has imposed some projects such as free mobile phones, tablets, Simcard with load and pocket wifi. The projects amended by the government and the DepEd aim to help students and educators who need assistance in this pandemic situation.

A year has passed since implementing the new Normal education nationwide in our country as the pandemic situation inclined. So far, students' and educators' lives in this new normal are a journey full of setbacks and hindrances, especially during this Covid 19 pandemic. Despite the barriers and problems being faced due to the arrival of the pandemic, students and teachers are still striving to learn, educate, and achieve goals and dreams through education. The road that we have taken is not easy, considering that we needed to adjust and cope with different platforms to continue our education. Collaboration and lending a hand to each other are significant and helpful in this situation. Understanding the condition of everyone and giving priority to their health and safety is being established.

Regulating to the new normal has been the daily routine of every individual. We are all on the road to coping up and adapting. Still, pursuing the significance of education is beneficial even if it is done virtually. Everyone is making sure to provide high-quality education in this time of pandemic. Putting the priorities first and slowly coping up and surviving in this time is one of the journeys that an individual has been partaking on. Let's make the education system be more stable and high quality even in this time pandemic.

References:

Coping Up With the New Normal Education. <https://nwuthereview.com/coping-up-with-the-new-normal-education/>