

3 WAYS TO MAKE MUSIC LESSONS MORE EFFECTIVE FOR STUDENTS

By: Arbhen Magpoc, Teacher II
Pablo Roman National High School

Teaching music to students can be difficult, especially if they are unable to absorb new concepts. Teachers can use a variety of materials and strategies to assist students better comprehend music. Maybe your students are having trouble because they haven't developed an interest in music. Maybe they want to learn, but the materials and concepts are too complex for them to grasp. You can employ approaches and strategies in any case. These suggestions will assist students in rekindling their passion to learn and improve their comprehension in music.

1. Teach your students music that they enjoy and can relate to. Teach your students their favorite songs or genres to instantly engage them. Music of all forms may be an excellent teaching and learning tool. There's no need to limit yourself to the classical and baroque music styles that have traditionally been linked with music training.

2. Technology is a teacher's best friend in the twenty-first century. Today's students are digital natives, and technology is a fantastic educational resource. Music is an excellent subject for incorporating new technology into the classroom, and efficient use of technology can help you teach more effectively.

Use applications and video sites like YouTube or Vimeo. When compared to listening to the same piece of music without a movie, watching a video can make a lesson more memorable. Showing footage of live performances is an excellent approach to demonstrate how instruments are played to your students. It's also a great chance to see well-known performers play.

3. Creativity may be a very effective teaching technique. It's an excellent time to add creative projects after pupils start to love completing chores. Give them a task where there are no wrong answers, like a composition project. Perhaps they've been studying a particular composition or musical style. Giving students the job of producing their own composition in the same style is the next step in the learning process.

When it comes to teaching students music, devoting time to creative projects like these is crucial. Music, at its core, is not only theoretical but also practical. Your students will study music best if they are engaged in it as much as possible. The most effective way to learn a foreign language is to travel to the nation. As a result, the greatest way to learn the language of music is through complete immersion. Make your music room a location where students can learn this creative language.

Students who are taught to be creative gain a skill that extends far beyond the music classroom. This is due to the fact that employers place a high value on originality. Furthermore, providing a safe environment for children to be creative can aid in the resolution of behavioral issues. It gives kids a safe place to express their feelings and emotions. Using collaborative learning approaches and incorporating creativity into your classes is a winning combination.

References

solfege. (2020, June). solfege.io. Retrieved from www.solfege.io.com: <https://solfege.io/teaching-kids-music>