

GENERAL CLERK TRAINEE / CASHIER

by:
Richelle Ann S. Mallari

An office clerk's responsibilities include filing and organizing records, as well as doing administrative organization chores in order to encourage effective operations in the office they serve. They are in charge of clerical and administrative tasks at an office. They compile, copy, sort, and file office activity records. They are also in charge of doing daily office activities correctly and on schedule. An efficient clerk can work hard to keep the office running smoothly.

Furthermore, cashiers' responsibilities are comparable to those of clerks. They, like clerks, should have a strong work ethic and a high degree of accuracy. They must be accountable and dedicated to giving outstanding service. Accepting payments, verifying that pricing and amounts are correct, and providing a receipt to each client are some of the cashier's tasks. They, like a clerk, must be computer literate.

Cashiers perform a variety of important tasks in retail enterprises. They are in charge of processing and accepting payments, as well as providing clients with receipts when they depart with their items. Cashiers must also manage other goods such as coupons while giving exceptional customer service.

Cashiers are responsible for a range of critical activities in retail establishments. They are in responsible of processing and taking payments, as well as issuing receipts to customers as they leave with their purchases. Cashiers must also manage other items like coupons while providing excellent customer service.

Whether you are a cashier or a clerk, you must prioritize your duties. How well you feel you fit with your work, team, and the organization as a whole is one facet of job satisfaction. There is no such thing as a flawless career, team, or organization, but you will be significantly more happy if you feel more aligned with the work, beliefs, and behaviors of those around you. According to a recent Gallup Poll, persons who grin and laugh at work are more interested in their employment. And the more you are involved, the happier and more excited you will be.
