Knowledge has always been the key that we used to discover a new door with endless possibilities. It has led us to become more innovative and seek progress towards a brighter future. As cliché, as it sounds, having knowledge, is powerful. To attain knowledge, we must strive to acquire learning, experiential and factual. We must never neglect our education. We must always lead by educating each other so that we can all work hand in hand towards a better world.

Sadly, education is not accessible to everyone, especially in a country like the Philippines. Some children do not have the privilege and opportunity to have a good education because of poverty. This problem is already dire enough, but little did we know that it will get worse. When COVID 19 struck, the problem of inaccessibility to basic education has worsened. Everyone had to stay home, and many schools have opted for online and/or remote learning setup. With this, only households that have access to internet connectivity are able to continue their online learning,

Given all these, those who have the privilege to comfortably continue with their studies must not take this opportunity for granted. Students must work harder to attain target learning goals. The opportunity to study with a stable internet connection and mental health is a privilege. Those who have it must utilize it to their advantage.
