Classroom discipline is one of the greatest challenges a teacher faces in the field. It gives necessary implications for daily interaction inside the classroom, and it should be practiced every day. Here are some tips for you to lessen interruption or disruption during class discussions.

1. Set house rules. To avoid a disoriented class throughout the year, the teacher must start the school year with discipline. It is better that pupils know their limitations to prevent misconceptions about how they should behave inside the classroom.

2. Be always fair. Learners have a strong sense of awareness. They can easily identify

What is and what is not fair. The teacher should deal with her students with utmost equitability so him not to be labeled as unfair. It is also important to make pupils realize it for the teacher to be respected.

3. Deal with disruptions without making a fuss. As much as possible, it is better not to break the momentum of your discussion. If you find your pupil not listening or not paying attention, you just must ask questions to get him back on track. Avoid making a fuss so you will not totally ruin the lesson delivery and waste the precious time of other students.

4. Avoid humiliation or bullying. As the teacher, you are expected to keep order and discipline of the class. However, it is much better not to confront a pupil in front of the class. It is advisable to talk to the pupil who committed the mistake in private. In this sense, the pupil can avoid losing a face while you can continue to teach anything in your class with dignity.

5. Put a little humor in class disruptions. Sometimes it is healthy to put a laugh on the faces of the learners to get back on the lesson. You just must be careful in giving judgment in order to be offensive to other pupils.

6. Expect positive Attitude towards your pupils. You should expect that your pupils are capable of behaving on certain matters. It is important that you motivate them to be always disciplined. Inculcate in their minds the importance and advantages of having self-discipline in all situations.

7. Be a role model. They say values are caught and not taught, so it is better that you practice what you teach for the pupils to realize that you are right to be followed. Set good examples so they can recognize the importance of being disciplined. Further, you should be consistent in your rules.
