

HEARING IMPAIRED STUDENTS IN A NORMAL CLASS

by:

Danica Jean D. Hernandez

Administrative Assistant III, Dinalupihan East

Each persons has different point of views in life, different appreciations for everything and has different level in handling some difficulties. Those persons with disabilities need more attention and understanding in order for them to live as normal people could do.

A student with disability may or may not survive in a class wherein the other students are normally born or born without disabilities. She may survive through the help of parents, classmates and most especially teachers. But if the teacher can't handle such, it may become a problem for the student with a disability.

A student with an impaired hearing can survive a normal class through the help of people surrounding her. She can communicate but with difficulties on site like speech defects, language-processing and social skills. She can learn whatever the teacher is teaching but when it comes to feedback at home regarding the topics learned, she may not convey it well. She might need help regarding an assignment but can't explain well how to do it or how to answer it. It may be hard for them, but it requires a lot of patience and understanding for them to survive a normal class.

There are a lot of strategies in order to help a student with impaired hearing especially to those classes with normal students. It may sound a little hard for the part of the teacher and the normal students, but we can't reject students with disabilities, we can't afford to lose a student just because they have disabilities, all we can do is to help them grow at their own pace.

References:

<https://mobilitysupplies.com.ph/blog/pwd-philippines/#:~:text=In%20the%20Philippines%2C%20PWDs%20have%20access%20to%20financial,all%20commercial%20and%20government%20transactions%20in%20the%20Philippines.>

<https://www.thoughtco.com/strategies-to-support-hearing-impaired-3110331>