Teachers are part of the foundation that prepares the mind and skills of a child. They sustain great responsibility, but it is a fruitful profession because the students' achievements are not merely theirs to celebrate. It is a teacher's achievements, too.

Teaching is very social and interaction-based profession, but due to COVID 19, teachers have been forced into an isolating experience. The pandemic has had massive effects on normal life, tough as it already was in many countries. For schools, students and parents, the impact of closed schools and learners stuck at home with their modules or no access to learning at all, the out turn has been melancholy.

Thus, Educators are working through the struggles, finding ways to adapt their new strategies to fit our new normal situation and shifting the goal of teaching. The pandemic has revamped how teachers cut up their time between teaching, engaging with students, and administrative reports. However, Teacher's dedication and perseverance to make teaching and learning possible for all children are overflowing. Flexible to adjust to different learning styles.

Teachers are heroes same with doctors, nurses, emergency medical technicians (EMTs), service providers and a myriad of other brave and intrepid people who have worked diligently to combat the challenges of this pandemic.

Without teachers is also a place where children have no way to learn how to read, write, express their own ideas, and listen to others, to take their turn, and to appreciate differences. As always uttered, without them, there would not be doctors, engineers, or lawyers.

It is indeed a noble profession of all. They do it because it is call, not because they are going to get rich.
