In this digital era it is more important than ever to inculcate in our children a desire to read and to give them the understanding of the impact reading can have on the rest of their lives. Children may find it hard to learn to read but when they learn in early grades, they are more likely to become learners. Because reading is essential to education.

Mastery in reading, writing and spoken language is dynamic for our children's success. Through these, they develop communication skills for education and for working with others: in school and at work. Learners who find it difficult to learn to read are likely to struggle across the curriculum. You may have read that many successful people read. They read to stay informed, strategies for success, and to continuously improve their minds.

People who love to read are open to new opinions and perception which gives a more opportunistic mind set. Reading a book also provides important talking points that can be used to ease the exchange of ideas and connect with prominent people, helping us develop compatible social circles and beneficial workplace dynamics. As a person who is always curious we must extinguish this thirst for knowledge by consuming information and one of the best ways of doing so is reading a book. It's important to read different kinds of books to children to elaborate thoughts and to boost their moral values. Books, by their very nature, have the added inspirational benefit, providing the motivating force and activation energy needed to change our behaviour and adopt more productive patterns of living. Furthermore, depending on the type of material we consume, actual knowledge is accruable.

Making reading a habit is a great motivation for us to do better in life. The more we read, the more our understanding and comprehending skills improve.
