

THE RIGHT WORK ATTITUDES

Having the right attitudes when doing job is something that has been proven to increase the chance of having harmonious relationships within a workplace. While skills and abilities are fundamental when it comes to doing work tasks, things would not go so well if these things alone are to be considered. The balance of being able to do work properly while keeping good relationship with workmates and maintaining self-discipline is a must for a person who wants to grow professionally. Through the years, several companies were able to succeed with the aid of their employees' work ethics. UNIT9, a multidisciplinary production company in London which works in different interactive areas focuses on recruiting employees who have good characters equaling to their impressive curriculum vitae (Burgess 2018). Zappos, an American online shoe and clothing retailer based in Las Vegas, Nevada, United States also goes for individuals who resonates the most with the company culture (Kashyap 2022). These facts go to show that even well-known companies believe that skills are not the only thing that matter when it comes to work.

It is important to take note of the right work attitudes to develop when going to your work place. To begin with, respect for others is the most commonly needed but is often neglected. Being kind enough to respect other's idea even if you have your own shows openness and humility. Oftentimes, the need to listen rather than to insist is crucial in keeping the workplace functionally healthy for everyone. By allowing yourself to sit down and have a conversation regarding the development of strategies or providing solution to problems with workmates, respect is already taking place. Disagreements are inevitable but when a person already knows how to entertain ideas and insights, everything will go along smoothly. Moreover, this valuable trait helps workmates develop confidence and sense of belongingness which then boost their desire to accomplish their task doing nothing but their best.

Enthusiasm is another valuable attitude that must hit this list. An employee exhibiting desire to happily do his job is contagious. For every day, dealing with workloads is always a struggle for everyone. If this situation would be met with a face that looks like a crumpled paper, it could only end up as something that can be considered as a burden for each and every one. On the other hand, a light face welcoming tons of tasks would make it look like a challenge to become better rather than a problem to complain about. Imagine an office filled with workers with this kind of attitude. There could be nothing less than a team doing everything together with smiling faces while aiming for one single, essential purpose.

Being committed, an attitude that requires sense of responsibility is another significant thing in a work place. When everyone is determined to do their task properly, the result would be pretty close to their target even if they failed to achieve it. The desire to accomplish tasks properly indicates the absence of mediocrity at work. Employees who were contented with the attitude of “just finish the task no matter what” always end up without any recognitions and even far from achieving self-improvement. Commitment fuels the determination to bring out the best in everything a person do. No matter how big or small it is, a person who is always committed will put his best in any task assigned to him. Hence, the result would always be something he would never be regretful of.

Developing innovative attitude is the last but not the least on this list. Nowadays the demand to find new ways of doing things is of great significance. Office tasks are now requiring clever skills aside from dependence to modern age technology to be done with precision and accuracy. For employees, the need to be good at strategizing can help produce better results. If a person practices innovative thinking, chances are he would be able to naturally find ways in solving problems and even present other ways in having his job done. These kind of people seek alternative ways to make something work. They often learn from failure and aren't afraid to take risks. Instead of seeing an impossible task, they find the challenge invigorating (Indeed Team 2022). Giving up is not an option for them since they don't stop until they're able to finally find ways in putting an end to problems.

It is important to develop skills when at work. However, dealing with workmates is inevitable and socialization is always a part of professionalism. A healthy working environment does not only involve a single party which always makes way just for everything to look better. It needs the whole team to create a motivating working environment. Efficient and effective work force can only be attained if employees are somehow considerate and understanding. To conclude, the attitudes mentioned above must be developed by every single person in the team if they want a long-lasting admirable office for each and every one.
