

KEEPING YOURSELF AS AN EFFECTIVE TEACHER AMID PANDEMIC

by:

Jennifer B. Sabino

Teacher III, Old San Jose Elementary School

Effective teachers are exceptional in helping and guiding learners to succeed. The skills needed for effective teaching comprise more than just proficiency in an academic ground. You must be able to interrelate with individuals and help them comprehend a new way of looking at the world in some other way if ever challenges come your way.

Being an educator is not an easy job. With low compensation in front and loaded paperwork plus infinite learning just to stay updated in the demand of changing world. As a teacher, you are a prototype of a protagonist, in short, a role model who sets the manner for the class. If you display passion and commitment, your pupils are more likely to reciprocate that will last throughout their life.

Keeping yourself as effective as you can while you are amid a fast-changing world with technology and COVID19 too, is a sign that your heart is still beating for the teaching profession. Being more conscious of your own inclinations will help you distinguish parallel or different preferences in your learners and respond consequently.

Successful educators are irreplaceable in this chore – and will endure so in the predictable future – but they essential to be reinforced in multiple ways to be effective in changeable circumstances. Assuming the vital role teachers play in pupil’s learning, we should outline three key principles to help governments and their development partners in backing up teacher effectiveness during and in the aftershock of COVID-19. It deliberates these principles in relation to the three points of the World Bank’s COVID-19 education policy response: adapting, regulating continuity, and improvement and acceleration. These three principles are basic and apply regardless of country framework.

If having a physical class is not advisable in other places, make sure to have consistency and uniformity in your online class schedule as well. Because as they say, “Communication is the tool for the learners to learn.” Spread positivity and make your learners happy even though we all know that time is not ideal, and the future holds are also unknown to us. Be an open-minded person in an ever-changing world. Embrace changes. Try to see what they really need and want while learning during a pandemic.

References:

<https://openknowledge.worldbank.org/handle/10986/33775>

https://cndls.georgetown.edu/atprogram/twl/effective-

teacher/#:~:text=They%20are%20prepared%2C%20set%20clear,students%20learn%20in%20different%20ways.