

PROMOTION: A THIRST FOR PROFESSIONAL GROWTH

by:

Jennifer B. Sabino

Teacher III, Old San Jose Elementary School

Getting hired as a public teacher and being part of the DepEd family, the benefits you will receive are not enough to stay in your career until retirement day. It is every single educator's dream to get promoted instantly in his/her designation, well at least the majority. Promotion is both a sign of being competent and dynamic in your field of work. Promotion as well as development in a position which will increase your salary plus makes you more accessible for new learnings and training.

Having a bachelor's degree is not enough. We have to elevate your educational station to the maximum level. Getting a postgraduate course like a master or doctorate degree is an advantage for everyone. The longer you are in the world of teaching, the more probability of getting into a higher position. If your school leader assigns you as a coordinator in a specific area, do not complain or refuse. Just do your best and motivate yourself that you are planting seeds that soon will be fruitful in the future.

Level up your knowledge and expertise. The more training and conferences you appeared, the more you increase your knowledge. In addition to previous knowledge are also the certificates or physical recognition that come right after every training/seminar; hence you must secure these fragments of papers as this will be your passport for your journey for promotion.

While helping your school to improve why not do research on how to improve the system and its physical development. This will help you to acquire additional points while helping your school. This is as same as holding a school project or an event. You can enjoy your passion or hobby by training promising young athletes or journalism in your school as a Mentor or Coach.

Technology today is a necessity, not a luxury thing. Teachers should be digitally advanced and can use this in teaching and school development.

Above all, humility, compassion, and kindness at all costs should be your companion. Without these, you will never get what you sought. These come hand in hand with good management.

Dream high for your best life, Teachers!
