

ROLE MODELS

by:

Ethel Joyce T. Bartolome

Administrative Officer II, SDO Bataan

Those who succeed in the position are awarded the title role model. Not everyone can just have the title given to them. You won't always get a fair shake from life. It will give you such a strong kick in the stomach that you will collapse and have to decide whether or not to get up. But you have to stand up every single time. Your current self, your future self, and the person you were all depend on the circumstances of your existence. Not everyone can understand the enormous influence the people you pick to be your role models will have on you. In my life, I've discovered that there are many people – whether they are people I know directly or those you see from a distance – who I can consider to be my role models. There are a few persons on the list I have in mind that I wouldn't mind choosing and writing about.

We are pushed, inspired, and educated when we find someone to look up to and admire. We develop a barrier against detrimental or unnecessary distractions. We are inspired to pursue our noble goals. And we have greater tools to carry them out.

Sometimes we select our mentors, and other times they do. The key is to pay attention and look for chances to pick up knowledge from others. Look for a person to speak into your life whose attributes you admire. And don't assume anything about relationships.

These mentors could occasionally be both professional and personal. We are intricate beings with a variety of intricate interests. To affect the world, our families, and ourselves is something we all aspire to. Finding successful people in any field is a valuable endeavor. The question, "Who is succeeding in my line of work?" is one that must be asked. Even more importantly, don't put one ahead of the other by asking, "Who in my neighborhood is happy in their house and in their personal life?"

We are made to benefit from one another's knowledge.

The most successful people are those who have the most humility in their hearts. It is risky to try to get through this life without mentors giving us advice.

We require role models for a particular reason: to provide us with someone we can identify with, respect, and hold to a higher standard. We must be prepared to answer the question, "What would they do in this circumstance?"

References:

<https://www.inc.com/andrew-griffiths/we-all-need-someone-to-look-up-to.html>

<https://www.becomingminimalist.com/look-up/>