School readiness defines benchmarks learners should meet earlier they begin primary school. These standards have been planned by education researchers in order to foresee future academic success of the incoming learners. If a child encounters these benchmarks, then they are expected to make suitable progress through primary school and elsewhere. If they are not school-ready, they may struggle prematurely on and not ever catch up with their peers, which can have long-lasting effects on their educational and professional life as a person. Because school readiness is dynamic to long-term achievement, early childhood education is an essential investment not only for parents but also for humanity as a whole.

According to Dr. Dan Gartrell, a child development author and professor says, "People used to perceive kids were ready for kindergarten if they could utter the ABC's, count, recognize colors, and write their first name,".

But actually, readiness was constantly more intricate than that, and new brain research is helping us realize what readiness really is. Readiness doesn't mean just understanding the academic fundamentals. It means a child has an enthusiastic attitude and self-confidence in the process of learning: a healthy state of mind.

Both teachers and parents must be ready to make plan to motivate and prepare the child in going to school even though are different varieties of readiness during everyone's learning journey, even for adults!

Kindergarten life is a perfect time to expose your child to a rich bunch of experiences, information, and memorization. is the time their young brainpowers can memorize almost fluently – so everything your famine them to know, they can acquire now.

Supporting children’s learning at home, producing high-quality classroom surroundings, and fetching families effectively and equitably in their kids’ learning are more significant than ever as we pursue to bounce children the toughest probable jump to their success in the future.
