

CREATING A POSITIVE LEARNING ENVIRONMENT

by:

JEFERSON JOHN P. BASTO

OIC- HEAD TEACHER, STA. ELENA ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

One of the most critical aspects a teacher can do is to promote a learning-friendly environment in the classroom. As more learners enter classrooms equipped with cell phones or other technology, this becomes even more important. Many learners also come late for class, leave early, or occasionally skip class totally. Therefore, at the school level, classroom management becomes more important. The first class meeting is when effective classroom management begins. Everything a teacher performs on Day One will provide the foundation for the rules, habits, and expectations that will be followed by the class as a whole.

The learners who are learning, the material that is being taught, and the setting in which all of this is taking place are all factors. Many studies are devoted to understanding how children learn and how to make the material interesting, but many teachers fail to consider how they may modify the classroom setting to increase students' focus and learning.

Physical space

As an adult, having an uncomfortable workspace with non-ergonomic chairs and tables will have a variety of negative effects on your productivity. Children learning their ABCs and 123s experience the same thing.

One of the key elements of a supportive learning environment is the physical presence of a space where students can sit comfortably, see and hear what their teacher is saying, as well as interact with their classmates.

Learning ambiance

Each child is unique. Simply by staring at the board and paying attention to what the teacher says, Student A might be able to understand the lesson. Student B, on the other hand, prefers using visual aids to fully comprehend the lesson's material. The type of person who learns through real-world experiences is Student C. The point is that each child learns at a different speed and in a different way.

It is your job as a teacher to create an environment that encourages pupils to learn according to their own pace, learning style, and despite differences. Establishing norms and guidelines in the classroom can assist in steering children toward joining a group.

Sense of community and belongingness

Fostering a sense of community among learners, despite their differences is essential to create a supportive learning environment. Children are able to comprehend the reality of originating from diverse families, having different values, views, and religion, as well as the truth that every person is different at an early age.

References:

https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/honors_theses/2375/

<https://teachinctrl.org/classroom-its-role-in-a-conducive-learning-environment/>