When the pandemic struck the whole world with its impact on the educational system things indeed changed. The entire globe and the whole Philippines adopted alternative modalities in order to continue the education of all the educational clientele.

There were so many challenges that occurred but the people in our society learned to adjust. Since the people are resilient, the things turned out well and education in different forms flourished like the distance learning in the modular way, online learning, blended education, tv-based learning and radio-based mode. These paved the way for the continuous existence of learning among the youth and marginalized learners.

When the face-to-face classes finally resumed, the education sector established the aims to regain the effectiveness of learning among the students. They really put up the advocacy for better education in the New Normal. In line with these there are evident actions that emerged to regain the glory in education.

The implementation of quality education and realization of life-long learners are primarily included in the advocacy. The quality of education will serve as a bridge to fill the gaps brought by the recent pandemic. Thus, it will lead to a better education addresses the needs of learners.

The honing of the holistic aspects of the learners would may them transform into life-long students. Students in the sense that they will continue to learn and grow even after schooling. This means that they will be prepared to embrace all challenges in life and be able to apply life skills to embrace tomorrow.

With the advocacy cited there were many plans and policies that were released by the education sector. These are all contributory to the realization of a better education, supporting students in all schools in the land.

The advocacy for a better education is a living proof that the educational authorities continue to aspire for better learning in our country with a great paradigm in recovering from the recent pandemic.
