

SCHOOL, THE SECOND HOME

by:

Rose Ann D. Galang

Teacher I, Mabuco Elementary School

Oftentimes, we see the school as a building maintained by taxes of the people. But there is a deeper meaning to the square walls of the school.

For more than eight hours, the schools, public or private, homed students away from their family. The school supported, nourished, educate, and build these students' dreams. School becomes the second home of the students. This is clearly stated in various statements and posters in the school premises, like: "The school is your second home, clean your things as you go" and "Your School is your second home, keep it clean."

To most of the students, this is clear. They clean the classroom, pick pieces of paper, and leave their chairs properly before they go home. However, unfortunately, some students are not able to pick this concept. They vandalize comfort rooms and walls with drawings and irrelevant messages.

On the other hand, as their second home, there must be a family within it: a father, a mother, and sibling. This is true with the teachers – their second parents. It has been heard significantly in various context and concepts. Teachers are second parents of the students. Respect and kindness is given to them because of that special place in the children's heart.

The school is the second home. It has been a special place that has stood for many years. The goodness of the people within its walls and the support that was given by teachers to the growth and development of students made the school effective. If the family make a good relationship within its immediate members, the school is a place where social development is a must.

In other words, a school is not just a place where learning happens; it is a place where comradeship and future relationships laid its foundations.

References:

Wang, M. T., & Degol, J. L. (2016). School climate: A review of the construct, measurement, and impact on student outcomes. Educational psychology review, 28(2), 315-352. Swanson, J. C. (1960). A Survey of the Public Schools of the Philippines-1960