

TEACHERS SKILLS OUTSIDE AND INSIDE THE CLASSROOM

by:

Erwin D. Carreon

Teacher II, Pablo Roman National High School

Everyday, in performing their functions, teachers are leaders not only inside but also outside the classroom. A real skillful teacher always manifests his or her skills and competencies. As indicated by the Professional Standard for Teachers, Because of a teacher's education status and constant drive for improvement of learners, he or she must always remember that as a natural influencer he or she should lead by example in the way they speak, act and behave. They are the front liners who lead their students through activities which are challenging and learners who are knowledgeable and discerning. Equally, they take on additional teacher leadership roles inside and outside the classroom such as activities, events, and extracurricular programs are some of the factors that build positive schoolteachers frequently need to provide extra leadership support due to culture. Similarly, students benefit from endless academic and social opportunities from teachers like initiative and leadership capabilities. There are no shortages of the function of teacher in leadership roles for educators.

It is worth mentioning that there are endless opportunities for teachers to lead initiatives and programs inside and outside the classroom to intensify student's educational experiences. Sometimes these opportunities are formally appointed or open for applications; other times they're volunteer-based. The teacher's skills continue by way of additional teacher leadership roles inside and outside the classroom. Different events, activities, and extracurricular programs contribute greatly in building a positive school culture since it often require additional leadership support from teachers. In addition, students benefit most through the different endless academic and social opportunities. From teacher's initiative and leadership programs. Many teachers are versatile teacher leaders, who are prepared to take on extra leadership and understand the school situation. Students always have teachers who support learners selflessly, teachers who help them at all costs. These teachers are trusted by students and staff alike, they are the teachers who make decisions based on students' needs. These teachers are noted for their dedication in improving the students' academic and social experiences through their proven willingness to dedicate their after-school hours so that students may improve in their different performance and achievements. a

The heart and mind of an educator is the students' learning and well-being," A skillful teacher encouraged and influenced the learners to be focused, strategic, innovative, and collaborative." These qualities not only help teachers improve learning outcomes of the students, but also help in the continuous improvement of themselves, their co teachers, and their students.

According to the Teacher Leadership Competencies, published by the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards, states that "teacher leadership is no longer optional." it is part of the job. And there's no shortage of teacher leadership roles for educators. Teachers have endless opportunities to lead initiatives and programs on and off campus to enhance the educational experiences of their students.

There are many ways to be a skillful teacher inside and outside the classroom for students improve performance and achievement.

References:

March 2017. University's Online Master of Arts in Teaching and Master of Education in Educational Polici