The introduction of the different learning modalities gave hope to the teachers and learners because these modes served as lights in times of darkness. These learning methods paved the way for continuous learning and unceasing education which all learners need in their life journeys.

Blended learning is a kind of modality wherein the teacher utilizes two or more methods in teaching the learners. Commonly, it makes use of online learning plus another form of learning. The merging of two or more modalities may be done in order to attain more effective learning on the part of the student.

In the process, the teacher may utilize one method for synchronous teaching, let us say the teacher conducts an online class with the learners. On the other hand, on the other day, the teacher may employ modular learning which may be done in an asynchronous manner. The advantages on the part of the teachers would be the balancing of the methods and the attainment of effectiveness in teaching the learners. The variation would lead to better results in the end.

Blended learning is beneficial for the learners because they may enjoy both worlds that is they have interactive learning and learning independently through their own pace and means. The realization of the teaching-learning process through blended learning is the proof that education during COVID-19 can still be productive, lively, meaningful, and fruitful. With blended learning, the interaction between teachers and students would be more dynamic and interactive. Notwithstanding the present situation, the teachers may still soar high in their pursuit of providing quality education and the students may still grow and reach greater heights in acquiring skills or competencies.

Presently, blended learning can also be implemented since face-to-face classes are back. It can help both teachers and learners to have a more enjoyable learning environment.
