

INTEGRATING CORE VALUES INTO EVERYDAY TEACHING

by:

Pressy Leen F. Lima
Marina Bay Elementary School

The integration of values in lessons is an essential aspect of education. Values play a critical role in shaping the character and morals of individuals, and their integration into lessons can help learners acquire and internalize these virtues. By teaching values such as honesty, respect, empathy, and responsibility alongside academic subjects, educators can help mold students who are not only critical thinkers but also socially responsible individuals.

Values education is a crucial part of the curriculum because it teaches learners how to interact with different people and handle various situations. Take, for example, a student who has learned about the importance of empathy in their English class. In their daily interactions, whether inside or outside the classroom, they are now equipped to put themselves in someone else's shoes and address issues with a caring heart. This skill not only makes them better at interpersonal communication but also teaches them how to approach challenges from different perspectives.

The integration of values in lessons also fosters an environment of mutual respect, thereby promoting inclusion and social justice. Learners who have learned about the importance of diversity and equity in their history class are better equipped to navigate things such as microaggressions, biases, and prejudice. By understanding and accepting differences in people, students can develop a deep sense of respect for others, which is an essential trait in a diverse and globalized world.

Children learn by imitating what they see. Education professionals are aware that students learn a significant amount by observing the behaviors of those around them. The behavior of other students and staff has a significant impact since children enjoy imitating and acting out being older than they actually are. Each student's perspective on the world can be shaped by incorporating school principles into daily life. Character and values will become ingrained in students' daily lives through daily activities that emphasize character and values development. Additionally, school values can aid in shaping children's understanding of right and wrong as well as their future attitudes and behaviors.

Moreover, the integration of values in lessons helps learners develop a critical sense of responsibility and ethical decision-making, which is a vital component of their development as leaders and social change agents. Lessons that touch on topics such as environmental conservation, poverty reduction, and community development can inspire students to become active agents of change in their communities. It is vital to equip students with the tools they need to create a better world, and an essential part of that toolset is a strong foundation in moral values that guide their decision-making.

In conclusion, the integration of values in lessons plays a crucial role in shaping the character and morals of individuals. By teaching values in combination with academic subjects, educators can instill critical social skills that help shape responsible, empathetic, and ethical individuals. An emphasis on values education fosters mutual respect, inclusion and social justice, responsibility, and ethical decision-making, ultimately creating individuals who are not just academically competent but also morally exemplary.

References:

Values Integration in the Different Subject Areas

<https://ojs.aaresearchindex.com/index.php/AAJMRA/article/view/8058>

How would you integrate values in each of the following subjects?

<http://inkspiel.blogspot.com/2012/08/how-would-you-integrate-values-in-each.html>