

WHAT MOTIVATES LEARNERS TO STUDY?

by:

SHAYNE G. MASILANG

Teacher II, Alion Elementary School Apitong st., Alion, Mariveles, Bataan

In today's generation, where gadgets and the internet's availability are very possible, the aim of every learner to learn seems to be decreasing. As teachers and as parents, we have always wanted to give the best education to our children, but how are we going to fight battles with these gadgets? In our previous years, when there were no gadgets, children had much time and were focused on their lessons. In today's generation, the battle between studying and gadgets has been found to be relatable among students. As parents and teachers, what can we do with this dilemma?

Keeping in touch with our learners will be a great help regarding their attitude towards studies. By always talking to them and showing different scenarios about the disadvantages and advantages of having a great career, we may help them stay focused on their studies.

Another is choosing the right peers. Believe it or not, peers really matter and play a big part in one's decision-making and perspective in life. That is why making the right friends is very important in the journey of every individual.

Proper discipline and attention when given to them also matter. We should tap them every time they make mistakes and, at the same time, praise them when they do good things. Tell them that proper discipline is part of preparing them to become more responsible individuals.

Giving them consistent emotional support really matters. Let us show them that their efforts are well appreciated. In our modern world and generation, it is necessary for us parents and teachers to be appreciative of every beautiful thing they do. In our generation before, only the strong were recognized, and the weak were left behind. We should change this dilemma. Let us empower the strong and help the weak.

Health and nutrition also matter. If learners have good nutrition, they can think and perform well in class. Good nutrition should not always be expensive; we can have a small garden in our backyard to have free and nutritious foods.

Conducive surroundings and environments also influence their attitude towards their studies. If learners feel that they belong in a certain class or group, they are very excited to go to school and learn.

The teacher also has a big influence on learners' interest, especially in the primary grades. Actually, learners remember the good deeds done by the teacher rather than what she said to them. Teachers should always teach with a heart.

Students' interest in school is not easy to achieve, but if we consider the above mentions, these will be a great help regarding their drive to learn.

References:

<https://www.readandspell.com>

www.frontiersin.org