ABOUT THE COURSE

Background

According to UNICEF, equality in education is a major challenge of the international community aiming at providing children with disabilities a fair chance to attend school, learn, and develop the skills they need to thrive and participate in their communities. In the field of early childhood education for children with disabilities, Israel has made progress in the implementation of policies and programs that prioritize early identification and intervention. This proactive approach aims to identify developmental challenges as early as possible, enabling timely interventions that can significantly improve outcomes for these children. Moreover, within Israel's multicultural society the early childhood education system places a strong emphasis on adopting a family-centered approach that takes into account the different needs and values of diverse populations. This approach recognizes the vital role of caregivers in the development of young children and seeks to involve them in the educational process, fostering a supportive and collaborative environment. Overall, Israel's early childhood inclusive education framework reflects a commitment to inclusivity, early intervention, and collaborative efforts to ensure that every child, regardless of their abilities, receives the necessary support and opportunities for optimal growth and development for their specific needs. This progressive approach not only reduces social stigmas but also drives forward accomplishments of young children with disabilities.
