

TURNING LEFT OR TURNING RIGHT?

Would you rather turn right where there are no options left or left where there are no options right? “. In terms of its content and based on the respondent's way of thinking, this question is rather perplexing. Teachers would frequently come into perplexing questions like these. It goes without saying that teachers frequently come into challenging questions with real-world solutions.

Given all of its ramifications, I would choose to respond to the question by turning left when there is nothing right, as opposed to turning right when there is nothing left. This is primarily due to the fact that if something is not going well, we can always find ways to change it so that it favors what is morally right. However, if we proceed to the point where there is nothing left, it would mean that everything in that area has been wasted, that everyone gave up, and that everything has fallen apart.

Teachers are constantly given a choice in the field of education. Sometimes, we have a tendency to stick with choices that go against our better judgment because we believe they will benefit everyone. This forces us to make sacrifices so that we can find the greatest answers for the sake of our students. This makes teaching the noblest vocation.

An educator's life includes self-sacrifice since they exhibit traits that are based on the teachings of God and match those of those teachings. This may be due to the fact that Jesus Christ was a teacher. He instilled in our life lessons, taught us to value each student as our own child, and encouraged us to accept everyone around us for who they are.

These beliefs and principles serve as our compass as we strive to become devoted and successful educators.

The capacity to speak up for what is morally and politically proper is another ethical quality that all teachers must possess. We promise to uphold and obey both the dictates of the Divine and those of mankind. We ought to be able to appreciate the significance of leading a life that others would find admirable. The essence of our existence, after all, depends on the people whose lives we have impacted and the things we have left behind.

To top it all off, we should consider how decisions will affect everyone when making them. Will it be for the benefit of the world or will it hasten its destruction? While making judgments, a lot of factors should be taken into account.

Who knows, maybe the next time we are asked, we may be given the option of going right where everything is left to choose to be right again, or going left where everything is right.
