

FANCY LOOPS AND FLOWING LETTERS OF CURSIVE

by:

Marianne C. Trasmonte

Teacher I, Roosevelt Elementary School

Cursive writing is a form of penmanship that has been a mainstay in the classroom, it has been a basis of formal writing for Filipino learners in many years. Cursive writing teaches students how to write in a legible and aesthetically pleasing way and gave adults the opportunity to have a unique way to write their signatures and use it in legal documents. But in recent years, some are now questioning whether it should still be taught to students.

In this time, where technology is advancing at an alarming rate, bringing with it a variety of new possibilities and opportunities, some believed that cursive writing is no longer a necessary skill. Technology has replaced handwriting as the primary mode of communication and record keeping. With the advances in technology, we no longer need to rely on pen and paper to record and share information which usually takes a lot of time., we can easily share documents with anyone in the world in one click. You can even choose different font style and sizes that you want, from the formal Calibri to the ever fancy Edwardian Script , you can also type your documents in cursive using the Dreaming Outland Script Pro. Technology gave you a variety of option.

Even though technology makes cursive writing less of a necessity, cursive writing is still very useful. According to Dr. William Klemm, the “Memory Medic,” cursive can make children more intelligent. Practice writing by hand helps train the brain to integrate various forms of information at once, including visual and tactile inputs, while applying fine motor skills. Dr. Klemm suggests cursive can provide similar benefits to the brain as learning to play a musical instrument.

Learning writing in cursive helps a student to build hand-eye coordination. A student taking notes is more likely to remember things they wrote out rather than typed. It encourages the brain to remember and recognize patterns. And, on a less scientific note, handwritten cursive writing are considered more personal and thoughtful. It can convey so much about a person, their character, and culture. It is a form of self-expression.

Cursive writing is also the most commonly used for signatures, which is the primary way to verify a person's identity, ensuring accuracy and authenticity, it serves as a reliable form of identifying a person.

In a time when people are typing constantly, it's worth holding onto something that can take us away from screens.

References:

<https://medium.com/@vg.mariwa/cursive-writing-a-dying-form-of-skill-in-philippine-schools-79be64b43b02>

<https://cbanga360.net/2017/08/25/educator-asks-cursive-writing-still-important-schools/>

<https://ocvt.info/why-do-we-need-cursive-writing/>