Relationships among school heads, teachers, learners and stakeholders are substantial value in any school. The best way to achieve good and harmonious human relation in education is to apply the following tips.

Love your fellow. The first thing to do is to love others. In order to establish good human relationships in school is to accept the people around and treat them as your own brothers and sisters. With this kind of perception, you will learn to love them and be able to establish good relationship or harmony with them.

Show Respect. To show respect is very essential in building good relationships. You must respect the personal opinions and language of others for they have their own thinking and feelings. Try to understand what they feel and do not judge them by putting yourself on their own shoes.

Avoid conflict. In school, the best way to establish good human relations is to behave pleasingly to everyone. Never involve yourself in conflicts which would lead to greater problems. Avoiding conflict will emanate good character, thus, will achieve harmonious relationship with others.

Be free from envy. Be a person who compete with your own self. Never be envious of other's achievement for it will lead to insecurity and would destroy the bond among others. Be a person who accepts realities and who sees and appreciates the good things in others.

Be willing to help. Offer an act of service to your peers most especially in your workplace particularly in school. It is much admiring if someone is willing to serve and this will eventually lead to good human relations.

Show good intention. In everything you do, you have to express your honest intention because it will radiate on you. Once the people see that you are good then their response will be the same way.

Never utter negative words. A positive outlook receives positive feedback and frown repels. Negative words cannot help the people work engagingly and effectively. Always be positive in your words so that you can motivate and inspire others.

Be a blessing to others. Seek to be a blessing to others, a person whose only intention is to build connections with harmony and share experiences for the growth of everyone.

These are the basic yet most essential things that one should apply in school to have good human relations.
