

COLLABORATION AMONG PARENTS AND KINDERGARTEN TEACHERS

by:

Corazon C. Dela Cruz

Teacher III, Capunitan Elementary School

Collaboration is the foundation of an effective teacher-parent relationship. Teachers and parents can work together to combine their knowledge, insights, and resources to create the best learning environment for their children. As teachers and parents, we share a common goal: to ensure our kindergarten students' overall development and academic success. To achieve the best results for our students, strong collaboration between parents and kindergarten teachers is necessary. When parents and kindergarten teachers work together, children have a smooth transition between home and school environments, resulting in a supportive learning continuum. Understanding the skills assessed enables parents to reinforce them at home, reinforcing what is learned in the classroom. When conversations flow smoothly, students can see that teachers and parents are constantly looking out for the best interests of their children. Effective communication promotes a respectful relationship between teachers, parents, and students. The details provided on both sides can be combined in order to obtain a more complete understanding of the learners. This benefits not only them, but for the parents and their teachers as well.

Encourage parents to get involved in classroom activities, workshops, and volunteer opportunities. This involvement promotes a deeper understanding of the kindergarten educational programs and allows parents to take an active role in their child's educational journey. Offer parents resources and ideas for creating a conducive learning environment at home. Basic activities, such as reading together, practicing basic numeracy skills, and playing educational games, can help to reinforce lessons learned in the classroom. Promoting a positive attitude toward assessments can have a significant impact on a child's performance. Understand and deal with the diverse learning needs of the kindergarten class. Work hand in hand on individualized strategies to support learners with varying strengths and challenges, so that no child falls behind. Clear and effective interaction is critical in fostering relationships between teachers and parents. It allows both parties to share information, address concerns, and work towards a common goal: the learner's success.

Building bridges between teachers and parents is an ongoing process that requires dedication, understanding, and transparent communication on both sides. By promoting positive teacher-parent relationships, we can create an empowering and fostering educational environment that will prepare our children up for success and well-being. Let us embrace teamwork, improve communication, promote parental involvement, and work as a team to bridge these gaps and offer a successful learning experience for our students. By fostering a strong partnership between parents and teachers, we create an educational environment in which children feel supported, valued, and equipped with the skills they require to succeed. Remember, it's not just about the assessments; it's about preparing our young learners for a lifetime of academic success and personal development. Together, we lead the way to success!

References:

Parent-Teacher Communication: Strategies for Effective Parent Inclusion & Engagement

| American University

The Benefit of Parents and Teachers Working Together (verywellfamily.com)

Building Bridges: Fostering Positive Teacher-Parent Relationships (myteacherlife.org)