

TEACHERS AS ROLES MODELS

by:

Diana L. Enriquez

Teacher III, Bagumbayan Elementary School, Pilar, Bataan

Someone who motivates and inspires us to pursue excellence, live life to the fullest, and recognise our own finest qualities is a role model. Someone we look up to and want to emulate is a role model. They teach us by their dedication to perfection and their capacity to help us realise our own personal development. We rely on them to give us counsel and direction.

Anybody can serve as a role model, including parents, siblings, friends, and professors, who have a profound and transformative impact on our lives. Lisa Nash claims that among the many people who need to have high morals, teachers are one. To be viewed as a favourable role model, a teacher must exhibit moral qualities like justice and honesty as well as abide by professional norms of conduct.

A teacher is a child's ideal, so it's critical that they possess traits that both impress and allow the student to emulate in order to develop into a decent person.

Therefore, a role model is someone who possesses admirable moral attributes that a kid can relate to. A teacher's influence is profound, wide-ranging, and, of course, everlasting. Because the teacher is responsible for shaping their children's futures, parents have high expectations of them.

The development of honesty is something that parents desire for their children. Next, the teacher needs to act completely sincere in all of her interactions with the students under her care. As a result, the perfect teacher must always act with the utmost integrity and openness when interacting with students and her peers. The development of honesty is something that parents desire for their children. Next, the teacher needs to act completely sincere in all of her interactions with the students under her care. As a result, the perfect teacher must always act with the utmost integrity and openness when interacting with students and her peers.

Our second wish for the perfect teacher is that he should show a great lot of affection to every youngster entrusted to his care. They are lovable and affectionate adults because of the love they receive at this point in their lives. Children must learn to love since only love can truly make life worthwhile. Thus, it is imperative that the perfect teacher be kind and compassionate before he can instill in his students the more refined virtue of begetting love.

Students who have a loving instructor in their lives will always remember and love him for who he is; they simply adore him for being a love wellspring and begin to think that no one could be more affectionate than their former teacher.

The pupils think their teacher is the source of all knowledge. The teacher needs to maintain the children's belief, which can only be done if he keeps learning in addition to his teaching responsibilities. An effective educator is also an effective student. Furthermore, a teacher should never seem to know something if he is ignorant of it. The educator needs to be aware that kids don't take long to judge a teacher's abilities or knowledge. The pupils think their teacher is the source of all knowledge. The teacher needs to maintain the children's belief, which can only be done if he keeps learning in addition to his teaching responsibilities. An effective educator is also an effective student. Furthermore, a teacher should never seem to know something if he is ignorant of it. The educator needs to be aware that kids don't take long to judge a teacher's abilities or knowledge.

The instructor does not need to be an expert on everything; rather, the subject is moot if he deceives the students into thinking he knows everything there is to know. Rather than providing the kids with inaccurate information, the ideal teacher would assure them that he will research the answer to their question. If he does this, the kids will respect him for being honest and won't be upset by his ignorance since they understand that teachers are just people with flaws just like everyone else. This would unintentionally teach the kids to accept their own shortcomings and not even come close to rationalizing anything they

Being extremely understanding of the children's behavior is another crucial trait of the perfect instructor. Even though the teacher and the students are of different generations, it would be a tremendous asset in a teacher if he could empathize with the children, help them with their seemingly insignificant concerns, and understand their struggles. When a teacher adopts a friendly and approachable demeanor with the students, they will gain confidence in him, confide in him, and talk to him about any issues they are having. For this reason, the teacher will be adored for his ability to put himself in the children's position and comprehend their emotions. His wards will then also be taught

If a teacher possesses all the attributes listed above, he or she will be exceptional and leave a lasting impression on the young students under their supervision. They will end up being their teacher's exact clones. It is crucial that the instructor embodies the qualities he wants the students to have. The current decline in the younger generation makes it easy to observe how important teachers are. This is a result of our instructors' near total absence of the attributes that make a perfect educator, which leaves their students devoid of all moral virtues. A competent educator fosters in their pupils all the admirable traits of well-mannered people. Therefore, the perfect teacher is one who has a lasting influence on the students he instructs and who they remember for his admirable traits at various points in their lives. Teachers need to remember that their students are mirrors reflecting back to them the knowledge and skills they have acquired.

A syllabus rarely covers all that pupils learn from their best teachers. Teaching some of the most significant lessons in life is the responsibility of educators who support students' personal development. In your role as an educator, you will model for your pupils how to build their own relationships and become self-reliant. You will also provide them with cautious guidance and step in when needed. School is a place where social learning happens just as much as intellectual learning, and this is true not just in our formative years but even in college. Even while a teacher's impact on the school's social scene diminishes as pupils get older, the lessons they learn from their early experiences still have an impact on how they will interact with people later in life.

Instructors are rich sources of knowledge. They are in a position to impart life lessons in addition to academic ones because they have previously experienced what their students will go through and gone where they are going.

Teachers not just observe their pupils' development --- they aid in their development.

References:

Manoj Mathew, Teachers as Role Model

(http://EzineArticles.com/?expert=Manoj_Mathew)

Article Source: <http://EzineArticles.com/1301725>

<http://teach.com/what/teachers-change-lives/teachers-are-role-models>

<http://currentessays.blogspot.com/2008/08/teacher-is-role-model.html>