Music is an art form associated to the sounds and silences that we hear and experience every day. It is a universal language, capable of evoking emotions, ideas, and experiences. Many of the individuals use music in different purposes. It often gives a ritual function, either in the context of secular or in religious rituals like dance parties. It is diverse and multifaceted, encompassing, emotional, cultural, educational, cognitive social and more. Music is an Expression and communication, emotional release and catharsis, social bonding and community building, empathy and understanding, Relaxation and stress relief. More importantly, music has a great impact on the society. It brings people together, fostering social connections and community building. When a group from one culture exchange culture with each other, specifically in musical aspect, they gain valuable insight into another way of life.

The significance of music on society is profound, with impacts on individuals, community and society. To individuals, it provides Emotional expression and regulation, Personal identity and self-expression, cognitive development and memory, stress relief mental health, physical health and well-being. Songs are most treasured for telling us what concerned individuals, how they look social issues, and how they expressed their ideals, hope, frustration and anger.

To Communities, Music creates social bonding and cohesion, cultural preservation and heritage, community engagement and participation, economic growth and development, social change and activism. Music Researchers have proven that music augments group identity and that playing musical instruments specially their local instruments in a group helps us to coordinate our brains and our body movements with others. It is recommended therefore that music may increase our sense of community through coordinating movement through and thus, make us more social.

To society, music appreciates cultural diversity and exchange, historical preservation and documentation, education and learning, social commentary and critique and economic impact (industry, tourism, jobs). Music in the society has the magic to stimulate people and link with in a way that feels essentially different from other forms of communication.

Society needs music as it needs its people. We often feel that “no one understands us” or recognize how we “truly feel.” Through music, we find connections with others to express ourselves or find a sense of understanding among peers. Because of how strong of an influence lyrics and melodies have on society, we must be mindful of our social culture. Still, more vitally, we must be aware of the cultures we wish to build and develop through our music. Be mindful that music has the power to change the world in unanticipated ways, challenging views and detaching light on issues that have historically been unnoticed.
