Yes children, especially those in kindergarten do have very young minds. Whatever we input to them were really absorbed by them, whether good or bad. It is better to be very careful in sharing ideas, thoughts and even actions to them. They know how to determine which to do or not. All they can do is to follow whatever the adults told them to do so.

An example of action that can be easily taught to them is falling in line before entering the classroom. The teacher, at the beginning of the school year, may teach his/her class the proper way and importance of falling in line as they enter the classroom.

At their very young age, children were able to show the values of obedience and orderliness. To others, this act may be so simple. but for kindergarten pupils to be observed falling in lane properly, it was a great act. We all know how playful and disoriented those children are. But the fact that they can perform and obey their teacher's command of falling in line, it was a success.

Setting guidelines at the very start of the school year, this will surely come up a great outcome. Daily routines may be practiced regularly for the pupils to answer. This will make them familiarize with the activities to perform every day in class. It was a great pride for a Kindergartens teacher Like me, to make my pupils well- trained and disciplined in class. I am hoping that these traits can be practiced even outside the class.

Children being oriented to do falling in line orderly, will surely bring this virtue as they get older. A simple act but a fulfilling one. So shy not start to fall in line through victory!
