For the learner's school life to be fruitful, the learning experiences must be enhanced. The teacher is the one responsible for providing different kinds of learning experiences which are contributory to the child's development and growth.

It is expected to build the child's foundation for lifelong learning. Enhancing the child's learning experiences means to teach them the pre-requisites which are the basic skills that they ought to acquire such as reading, writing and mathematics.

The teacher must work on for the child's cognition. Cognitive development means developing the child's ability to understand and acquire knowledge. Let the child experience activities that may develop his or her cognition.

The teacher is entrusted to set the school readiness for the schoolchildren. This connotes that the teacher was able to prepare the classroom wherein the pupils will learn and enjoy. This must take into consideration its cleanliness and safety.

Another distinctive means to enhance the child's learning experiences is to lead him or her to curiosity and in exploration. Give the child the opportunity to ask questions, inquire about things and explore different areas in school.

It is the responsibility of the teacher to let the learners experience social interaction to the fullest, inside the classroom and even in the school premises. This can be done by setting activities that require communication and collaboration with other people.

The teacher should also develop resilience and problem-solving skill among learners. Learning experience would be fruitful or productive when the learners are resilient, are able to resolve problems and are able to decide for themselves.

It is vital to develop the confidence of every child. If he or she has the self-esteem, doing and enjoying school tasks or activities would be possible. Thus, the learning experiences are increased.

There are activities in school that parents are needed. The parental involvement is really contributory for the child feels the joy or happiness in learning when the parents are giving them time and support.

Enhancing child's learning experiences entails building the child's foundation for lifelong learning, setting the school readiness, leading to curiosity and exploration, letting the learners experience social interaction, developing resilience and problem-solving skill, developing the confidence of every child, and involving parents.
