Motivation is pivotal to the child's learning. It is influencing and encouraging the child to be more engrossed in studies and to more productive in school. There are possible ways or strategies on how to fully motivate every child.

Establishing a positive relationship with the learners. A teacher is expected to build a good relationship with the child. As an adult figure in school, the teacher should be someone who considers the child as a member of the family and someone to be cared for.

Having a positive relationship with a child is worth motivating.

Augmenting their interest and engagement. It is the responsibility of the teacher to determine the interests of the learners. Once their interests are captured, their willingness to engage and participate actively in the class will be possible. In this way, they will be more motivated to interact in class activities.

Stressing the relevance and importance of learning. As a person in authority in the classroom, the teacher has the privilege to emphasize the relevance and importance of learning to students. Motivate these schoolchildren by stating the benefits that they will gain in embracing education.

Appreciating students' responses. As a better practice, the teacher must be able to consider the ideas of the students. This means that the teacher has the compassion to understand the strengths and weakness of learners as well as their points of view. In this way motivation takes place.

Sharing new trends. The learners are more interested on new things or innovations. The teachers will motivate them to study if the new trends in education are well-presented to them.

Instilling goals and values. The presence of motivation is evident when teachers keep on talking about the educational goals and commendable values which are apparent in the school community.

Providing learning activities which are congruent with their personal choices. The teacher must implement activities wherein the learners like and enjoy. This strategy will motivate them well because they love what they are doing.

Letting them practice autonomy and responsibility. Give the learners to decide and to perform things which are related to their studies. This is a way to empower them and to help them attain confidence. This is also a way to motivate them to do their very best.

With the application of the said strategies, for sure the teacher will be able to motivate every child in school.
