Peer mentoring plays a big role in helping colleagues to be better or even at their best in teaching. Usually, a school principal or a master teacher provides this kind of technical assistance to other teachers, especially for professional growth and advancement.

In mentoring a peer, you need to look for relevant ideas and ways to provide with a fellow teacher. This is an indication the provision of support and technical assistance that he or she deserves.

Another means to mentor a fellow teacher is to conduct a focus group discussion. This is where the members of the group collaborate and share ideas with one another.

Mentoring a mentee-teacher is such a great opportunity to lead a colleague to a better professional relationship that can be enjoyable and more satisfying. It is great to see that someone supports you in the field.

It is a part of peer mentoring that you inspire your fellow teacher to seek professional advancement through further studies. It is fulfilling to support a fellow teacher for professional development and to serve as a mentoring model.

As a teacher who provides mentoring to a fellow teacher, it is a good practice to help him or her to in the improvement of classroom practices and teaching performance. Let your peer be more effective and more productive.

Building new concepts for learning together is fruitful. Have your peer collaborate with you in thinking of ideas which may be subjects for research, innovation and invention that will contribute to the field of education.

Sharing ideas freely in a conversation with a peer is advantageous. It is like having an intelligent discussion of different topics which are related to teaching and in managing the learners.

With peer mentoring you will be able to augment harmony with others, will be able to improve your leadership ability and the person you are mentoring, will be able to empower your fellow teacher, and you will be able to help the person professionally.

Peer teaching among teachers should exist for it is truly beneficial.
