

THE ROLE OF THE PARENT IN STUDENTS' SUCCESS PARENTAL

by:

RIZA R. MACALINAO

Teacher III, Sta. Rosa Elementary School

The impact of parents actively participating in their children's education is significant, as education is a collaborative process. Beyond the classroom, parent education has an impact on students' overall success, academic performance, and personal growth. Communicating openly is essential. In order to guarantee the best possible support for pupils, parent education programs strengthen the lines of communication between parents and teachers.

Students' motivation is greatly impacted by the involvement, support, and encouragement of their parents. One of the most crucial things parents can do to enhance their children's academic success is to provide a positive learning environment. For learning to occur, a favourable environment is required. By rewarding effort and progress rather than achieving the highest grade and taking part in school events, it also promotes a positive attitude toward learning and helps the learners face chances and difficulties. Promoting effective time management and study habits aids students in setting priorities and making efficient use of their time. Lastly, offering moral and emotional assistance. Being an effective listener is essential if they experience both personal and social difficulties. Supporting the encouragement and direction of students aids in their development of self-discipline, self-confidence, and readiness for success in the future.

Schools are more than just places to learn. Schools are communities by definition, gathering places for instruction and learning. In addition, they make friends, look for guidance, get advice, and grow as people. Choosing one that has a favourable effect is therefore crucial. When done properly, the friendships and experiences that come from being a part of a supportive school community can benefit both parents and students.

Parental participation is another essential component. By volunteering for various programs, attending events, and taking part in school activities, parents help to close the gap between home and school. This involvement has a favourable effect on students' intellectual and social development in addition to raising their spirits. For example, parents who volunteer for school-related projects or activities can give learners a sense of safety and community, which improves their educational experience. Attending and planning school events together helps to build a sense of community. They provide varied experiences that inspire all students to engage, experiment, and develop. These gatherings are perfect for imparting to pupils the teamwork, empathy, and respect for different points of view that will be necessary in the future.

In summary, the school community and its activities are much more than supplementary materials for the teacher's task. They are essential in helping pupils develop into well-rounded people. Each student's school journey becomes not only instructive but also a memorable and formative experience when a combination of academic and experiential learning is provided.

References:

(PDF) The Role of Parental Involvement in Student Academic Outcomes

The Role of Parental Involvement in Student Academic Outcomes