

ESTABLISHING COMMUNITY LINKAGES

by:

ALFONSO R. MICLAT JR., EdD
Head Teacher III, Balsik National High School

Community links in the school are vital for good school-community collaborations. These links foster collaboration, resource sharing, and educational support. The school can improve its activities and services for students by partnering with parents, local government, non-government groups, and other stakeholders. Community links give schools more resources, expertise, and opportunity to improve student learning and growth. They also encourage stakeholders to take responsibility and participate in educational and social issues. Strong community connections create a more inclusive, supportive, and responsive learning environment where everyone contributes to student and school success. School community relationships involve a school and its community working together.

These relationships foster a loving learning environment for pupils. They also provide schools with community resources and experience to improve curriculum, fundraising, and student well-being. School communities must intentionally create links with local companies, community organizations, parents, and other community members. School community connections foster a supportive learning environment that helps students succeed. These collaborations offer schools resources, expertise, and assistance to meet student and family needs. A linked school community enhances children's academic, social, and emotional growth, increases parental involvement, and improves attendance, academic achievement, and well-being. Effective schools that serve kids, teachers, and the community require community relationships (Skool Loop, 2025).

These relationships bring together people who might not otherwise meet. Parents usually only see teachers at parent-teacher conferences. This way, families might work with their school's teachers to improve their children's education. These collaborations also help teachers get to know their students better and learn about their passions, struggles, and dreams outside of school. School-community collaborations are the finest way to bond with teachers and parents. Finally, schools need school-community relationships (Spark Online School S.R.L., 2025). They are recognized in their communities and provide a safe space for students and parents to interact and work together to improve the community.

References:

Skool Loop, (2025). The Benefits of School Community Partnerships. Retrieved on October 22, 2025, from <https://skoolloop.com/news-items/the-benefits-of-school-community-partnerships/>

Spark Online School S.R.L, (2025). The benefits of a good school-community relationship. Retrieved on October 22, 2025, from <https://spark.school/the-benefits-of-school-community-relationship/>