Home visitation is important for improving child development. Being connected to the family relatives of pupils can lead to better academic performance and build trust. It empowers parent with the skills and knowledge, and it create a link to teachers' parents and learners. Building school and home connection bridges gaps between home and school. Making creative participation in the learners' journey during teaching and learning process and helps to understand their way of life and family routine, cultures and challenges. Hence, empowering learners' attendance through home visitation can create collaborative solutions leading to improve learners' behavior, reduce absenteeism and they learn to create a supportive network for the child's success. It also increases parental involvement of parents to activities in school and ensures that their child attend to school regularly. The teachers also understand home life situations and help adjust to teaching and learning process to better meet the students need in improving academic outcomes. Through home visitation it empowers all the stakeholders to work together for the student's success and significantly improving their daily attendance in school. The purpose of home visiting programs is to assist families in creating a setting that fosters their children's healthy development. Programs aim to improve school readiness, foster positive parent-child interactions, and improve child development by focusing their services on families. High-quality home visiting programs can offer child development and family support services that lower risk and raise protective factors, notwithstanding program differences in methodology, populations served, and targeted goals.
