In improving academic performance and social skills and behavior of a strong parent - teacher partnership is needed. This collaboration address learning gaps and reinforces positive habits and build trust that benefit the child's holistic growth. One of the advantages the learners would engage parental communication, and teachers tend to have a higher attendance rate, participation in school, better social skills and improve behavior. Teachers also benefited on it because open line communication with parents results to higher job satisfaction. They gain valuable insights into learner's life. If there is a two- way communication, there is understanding and harmonious relationship between parent and teachers. Sharing goals and working together provide a great opportunity to identify strength and weaknesses. Strengthening respect and trust also develop because trusting each other with respect can build a caring community as well as a caring partnership to parent and teachers. Through cooperation, communication and shared responsibility of parents and teachers can help learners achieve academic goal.

Effective communication between parents and teachers facilitates the early detection and resolution of possible problems. Whether it's academic challenges, behavioral issues, or emotional difficulties, a proactive approach ensures that children get the help they need right away. This collaborative problem-solving helps to keep minor difficulties from growing into major problems.

Strong parent-teacher partnerships help to create a feeling of community inside the school. When parents and teachers collaborate, they form a support network that helps pupils. This sense of community co which everyone feels respected and connected.
